Judges 6:12-14, 17 NIV

This series I want' to explore the questions, doubt, unbelief, and sometimes resentment that we may have with God because we feel that he has failed, disappointed, abandoned, or possibly even isn't real sometimes based on how we feel at that moment of what we've gone through. I personally feel that questioning God is not a sin, but is natural, and he doesn't disown us, or is salty about us having questions. Doubt also isn't a sin, nor is fear, but what is a sin is unbelief. We will all have moments of doubt, and fear is a natural feeling, I would go as far as to say that fear is present at the same time as faith, that they typically share the same space, just not the same intensity or level. Faith has to overcome, and step up to replace fear in order for us to move. My legs may still be shaking but I'm walking anyway, their my be tears running down my face, but I have to press through the pain, and my heart may be broken, but I have to trust anyway. In this section we will look at biblical characters that asked God to show or prove himself, and in the midst of not understanding his plan, walking blindly when he has told us to move, and even questioning whether it is really him speaking to us, or whether he is still walking with us when things get tough, but nevertheless still pressing forward. We will inevitably be called into action by God, and when that call occurs, we hope to be ready and at the moment have enough faith to carry out the assignment, but in case we are having moments of being human, we'll look to some situations where we my find commonality and faith that like them we'll be obedient and successful to the glory of God.
